The Group Mobility Erasmus + 2024 in Soest, Germany, brought together three countries; Italy, Germany and Hungary, for an experience that has enriched all participants in various aspects.

Students and teachers had the possibility to appreciate a culture and a way of life different from their own therefore, acknowledging characteristics that one was not aware of.

The week in Soest allowed us to reflect on similarities and contrasting features of our countries including the school system, lifestyle and future perspectives.

Firstly, one of the aspects that was greatly appreciated was the school system. Our students noticed a particular feature where students had the possibility to go outside in the school yard during recess, which occurred 2 times a day, to socialize with other school mates.

Even though classes started very early in the morning, 7:40 am, German students seem to enjoy their curriculum since it is very vast and it includes classes such as art and other laboratorial lessons.

Secondly, the excursions by our German hosts were greatly appreciated by our students as they had the opportunity not only to visit the various exhibitions but also to do the multiple work-shops available.

Furthermore, while visiting some of the cities, we were able to appreciate the architectural style of various buildings, new and old.

All this brought together culture and creativity among the students.

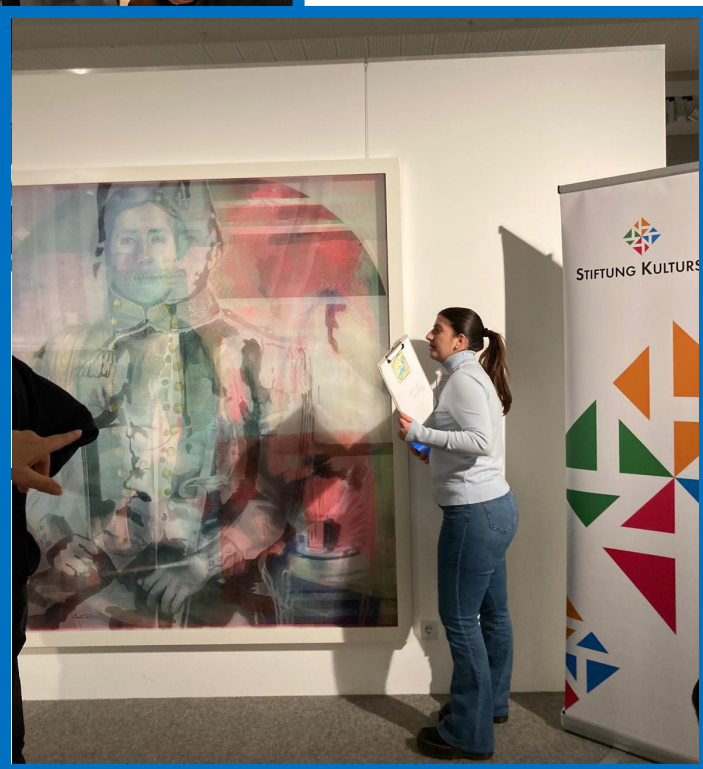

Probably the most important aspect of this experience reflects the bond established between the guests, host students and their fam-

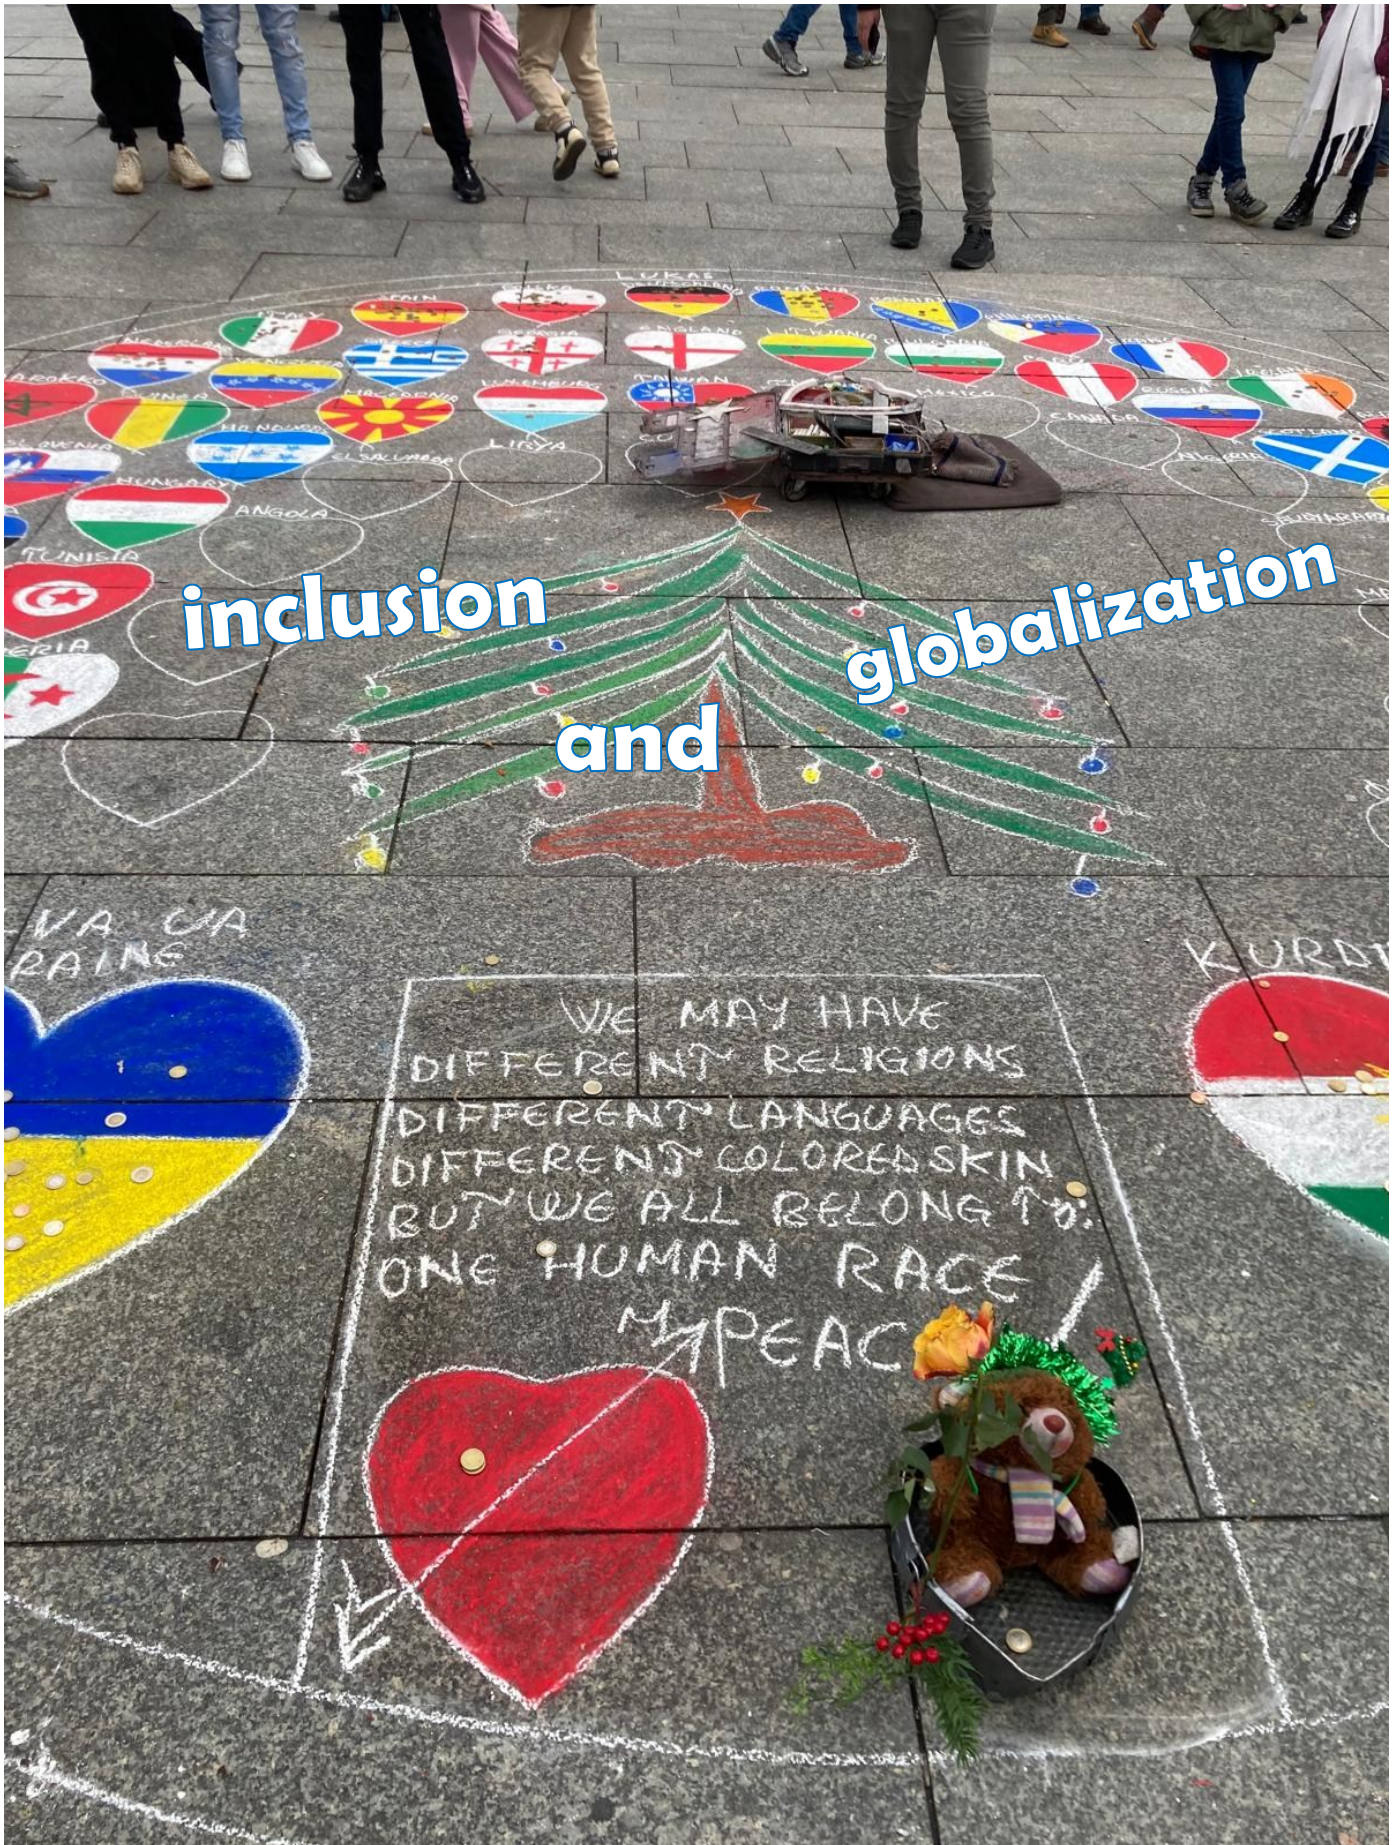

Being able to identify each other as “a new friend,” someone with who you can share experiences and thoughts with in is a language that is not your own proved to be, perhaps, the most positive aspect of this mobility.

If we must choose some words to give a meaning to this experience, they are:

Taking into consideration and accepting each other as members of the European Union and as people who want to reach similar goals, the Erasmus Mobility projects are an inspiring and meaningful means to achieve our objectives.
